File-Swappers Beware

A resident of McNulty Hall legally listens to music via his computer. In an attempt to thwart file-swapping, Johnson & Wales will report illegal use of digital music to authorities.

J & W implements strict policy on software piracy

BY DORA OLVERA
Staff Writer

Johnson & Wales University has recently sent out a memo addressing the situation regarding software piracy off of University networks. The memo states, "the university reserves the right to monitor all activities." The administrators advised the student body that if such monitoring reveals possible evidence of improper or illegal use they will promptly report it to law enforcement officials.

Johnson & Wales University administration is urging all students to stop file-sharing to avoid civil lawsuits and hefty fines.

"The University wants to restrict amounts being downloaded. We can't just shut off the internet completely. It would not be in the best interest of the students & faculty; the school doesn't want to become a desirable target for downloading," said Dean of Students, Terry Addison.

While Johnson & Wales attempts to thwart downloading, The Recording Industry Association of America (RIAA) is swiftly filing lawsuits against file-sharing users. In June of 2003 the RIAA filed more than 261 lawsuits on file-sharers around the country.

According to recording industry complaints, students have been downloading and sharing music off the internet which is a copyright infringement.

Most lawsuits are forcing the students to pay legal fines ranging from $12,000 to $17,000.

"I don't think that college students think it will happen to them. So they probably won't stop until someone they know at least gets caught or in trouble," said

Freshmen Micaela Burk.

While more than 75% of college administrators say software piracy is wrong, only 24% of students agree, according to a survey commissioned by the Business Software alliance.

J & W Director of Information Technology, John Snithers said, "I think file-sharing is a bad idea, first all of it's illegal, and the recording industry will find these people that are downloading. The industry is prepared to take disciplinary actions."

Michigan Tech. runs copyrighted-programs and routinely shuts down internet access to students that share copyright material.

Record companies are hoping to increase CD sales by decreasing the price of CDs. The Universal Music Group is slashing the price of CDs from $18.98 to $12.98 or less.

"Even though CD prices will be less, I think file-sharing is a better idea, because it gives you the opportunity to enjoy different styles of music and a very easy way to get free music," said Freshman Ali Mac.

bration intended to impress even the most discerning "Hollywood critic." This opening at the Johnson & Wales Inn serves as an opportunity for faculty and staff to mingle with students and families. special celebrity impersonators will grace the event. Past years have seen magicians, hypnotists, and other live stage performances.

The people's choice Homecoming Parade at 11:00 a.m., Saturday morning, represents the chance for clubs & organizations to strut their school spirit and creativity with a float.

The "Backlot BBQ" continues the movie premiere theme, taking you behind-the-scenes at the studio. Look for scenery, props, novelties, entertainment, and of course, great food!

Career preparation takes an interesting twist with a one-hour question/answer panel followed by a wine reception from 2:00 to 3:00 p.m., Saturday in the Amphitheater. Made up of deans, current students, and alumni, this panel of experts will answer questions about Johnson & Wales' unique approach to career-oriented education.

Sunday morning join Dr. John Bowen, President of the college, for a buffet-style breakfast at the Johnson & Wales Inn. Enjoy the opportunity to meet the President and other "stars" that run the show behind the scenes at your University.

A male resident student was assaulted off campus at 95 Pembroke Avenue, Providence.

The victim stated that while he was attending a party at 95 Pembroke Avenue, several individuals (including active and inactive Johnson & Wales students) who portray themselves as members of the ATO (Alpha Tau Omega) fraternity, arrived at the party and instigated a fight. ATO is not a recognized fraternity at Johnson & Wales University, nor is this group recognized as a local chapter by the ATO National Office.

As the victim was getting into a car to get away from the fight, he was allegedly dragged from the back seat by some members of the "ATO" group who hit him in the face with a bottle, stabbed him with a screwdriver, knocked him to the ground, and kicked him repeatedly before leaving the scene. One of the assailants allegedly stated that the assault was in retaliation for the victim's dropping out of the "ATO" group. The victim was treated at Rhode Island Hospital and later released. To date, one individual, Stephen Alegria, has been arrested and charged with assault with a deadly weapon in connection with the incident. Five Johnson & Wales students will compete in the Culinary Olympics this fall

BY CHRYSTAL M. POCZEKAJ
Staff Writer

Forget the torch and light the stoves! Five of Johnson & Wales (J&W) finest will be heading to Erfurt, Germany in the Fall of 2004 to compete in the Regional Team category of the Culinary Olympics.

Commencing over a hundred years ago, the Culinary Olympics, originally dubbed the Internationale Kochkunst Ausstellung (IKA), was founded in Frankfurt, Germany. The first IKA held in 1900 brought together a modest group of four nations at the Frankfurt Fairgrounds. Since its humble beginning, the Culinary Olympics has exploded into a world-renowned competition attracting the hottest cooks and freshest talents across the globe!

The United States did not take part in the games until 1956 with the odds stacked against them, according to Unichef.com. The US won its first world championship in 1960 and continued its winning streak into 1998; to this day the US holds down the record for most successive wins.

This year's team consists of Guillaume Bienaime, John Paul Carmona, Michael Finnen, Nic Manning and Brittany Tanelli will be led by Chef George O'Palenick, Assistant Coach Chef Uta Schepers, and Chef Kevin Duffy. O'Palenick explained, "A couple of years ago we started an inter-campus competition with every campus...started right here at Providence." O'Palenick said that the competitions were sanctioned with the American Culinary Federation (ACF) and judged by Culinary Masters such as: Daniel Scanell, Certified Master Chef (C.M.C.), member of the ACF Culinary Team USA; David Megines, C.M.C., Vice President of Purchasing for Compass Group North America and Susan Notter, a pastry chef from Birmingham, Alabama and former Distinguished Visiting Chef at the Providence Campus.

"We pretty much invited certain students with referrals from other instructors...people who had the academics...and skill," said Chef O'Palenick.

Students were chosen based on the judges' score, their culinary strengths and backgrounds, and their commitment to the team.

The students are already having their commitment tested with multiple weekly practices in preparation for their first event coming up October 5-6th, an ACF show in New Hampshire, a way for the students to "get their feet wet" as O'Palenick described.

With an outstanding team and exceptional leaders, the J&W team is sure to provide strong competition for anyone in their category and represent Johnson & Wales University to the fullest. Congratulations and good luck

Erfurt, Germany - Olympics. The 1,260 year old state capital is the sight of the of the 2004 Culinary

Why is it so hard for a 30-year-old to think about retirement? When you're young, retirement planning is pretty far down on your list of concerns. Say, somewhere between the visiting police cars and dishpan hands. And that's completely understandable. But by planning early and clicking in that plan, you can increase the money you'll have to enjoy retirement, and potentially decrease the years you'll spend working. We offer a range of different options, including tax-deferred retirement plans, IRAs, and ERAs, all with low expenses. Now that's something to fall in love with.

Three J&W Students Elected to The 2003-2004 NSMH National Board

The National Society of Minorities in Hospitality (NSMH) inducted sixteen members to its 2003-2004 National Board last June. Among them were three students from Johnson & Wales University. These sixteen new student leaders were either elected or appointed to their positions at the organization's 14th Annual National Conference held in Boston, Massachusetts in February 2003. They embody the diligence, aspiration, and diversity of the premier professional organization for minority hospitality students' general membership of over five hundred students. See the entire National Board - at <http://www.nsmh.org/board.htm>.

Students on the National Board work closely with corporate sponsors, representing the leading companies in the hospitality industry, to offer enriching programs and promote professional development. ## LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dear Editor,

My daughter is a first year resident at Renaissance Hall. Recently, there was a serious disturbance outside of Renaissance Hall involving many individuals, many police, emergency medics, etc.

Upon returning to her dorm just before Midnight, my daughter came upon utter chaos in the parking lot (police spraying pepper spray, people screaming, people with blood on their clothes, etc.).

Despite rushing into her dorm to avoid the violence that was occurring, she was exposed to the pepper spray the police were spraying, yielding a 20 minute coughing and choking fit. She has expressed to me that she is totally afraid to continue residing in Renaissance Hall.

This is the third time, in two weeks, that there has been violence of some form or another outside of Renaissance Hall. Isn't J&W responsible for the safety and security of students in THEIR residence halls? Why is this still occurring?

I searched the local Providence papers this morning, via the internet, to see if anything was written about what occurred at Renaissance Hall last evening. I have found nothing.

I am hoping that, as the campus newspaper, you will address my concerns. Perhaps, if brought to the forefront, J&W will take necessary steps (i.e. hiring a private security guard agency to Renaissance Hall) to insure students' safety.

Sincerely,
Lori Yeske
J&W Parent

Dear Editor,

This letter is in response to Ms. Yeske's letter to the editor regarding safety concerns at Renaissance Hall. While her unease is certainly understandable, students and parents alike can be assured that the disturbance to which she makes reference was an isolated incident and does not, in any way, reflect the climate of Renaissance Hall or any other residence hall on campus.

The safety of our students is paramount, which is why all residence halls are provided with 24-hour monitored access. The incident which occurred outside Renaissance Hall earlier this week was unfortunate; however it was the first on-campus incident of its kind this year and at no time did it take place inside the hall. As is customary when a public disturbance occurs, Providence Police responded and the situation was quickly diffused. The students involved were dispersed and no complaints were subsequently filed with Safety & Security.

It is regrettable that Ms. Yeske's daughter and other students witnessed a dispute in front of their residence hall and were made to feel uncomfortable or, at worst, unsafe. The Office of Residential Life is committed to preserving the sense of security to which every student at Johnson & Wales University is entitled; anything done to threaten that is taken very seriously.

Perhaps it is of interest to note that prior to publication Ms. Yeske's concern was personally addressed by the Director of Residential Life and, according to Ms. Yeske, resolved to her satisfaction.

New England Editorial Roundup

Associated Press

The Patriot Ledger, Quincy, Mass.

The head of the Massachusetts National Guard has some compelling arguments for closing nine of the state's 72 armories. The buildings are old and bringing them up to date would require costly renovations. A look at many armories makes it clear these buildings were not meant for modern-era warfare or training.

Locally, the Weymouth armory is scheduled for closing. Others include Adams, Chelsea, Natick, New Bedford, Somerville, Southbridge and Woburn. U.S. Rep. William Delahunt, D-Quincy, quickly jumped to the defense of the Weymouth armory, saying Congress would look closely at plans to close facilities.

If Massachusetts would still have 63 armories, including several in towns close to Weymouth, it's difficult to see why there should be much debate about closing Weymouth.

Braintree, Hingham, Quincy, Stoughton and Whitman have armories, and the unit based in Weymouth will be reassigned to Dorchester. Hanging on to outdated, underused and unneeded facilities is a costly tradition, fostered by Congress to keep the home folks happy. It is little used at the present time. So why not focus instead on finding the best possible reuse of the building, situated on two acres?

The Weymouth armory is not one of those fortress-style armories so common in New England. It dates only to 1962 and some have suggested it would be suitable for commercial use or apartments or condominiums. Instead of more luxury housing, Weymouth officials should consider purchasing the property from the government and having it developed solely for affordable housing.

The Hartford Courant, Hartford, Conn.

Many states are saving hundreds of millions of dollars by reducing their prison populations without endangering public safety.

Budget-strapped Connecticut has good reason to follow their example. According to U.S. Justice Department figures, Connecticut last year recorded one of the nation's fastest incarceration growth rates. As of July 1, more than 19,000 people were behind bars at an annual cost of more than $500 million.

The General Assembly considered a package of correction-related proposals this year but failed to vote on them. Legislators will re-examine the issue in a special session in October.

Meanwhile, the Appropriations and Judiciary committees have scheduled a public hearing for Sept. 24, at which experts from other states will testify.

Legislators may be daunted by the scope of the proposals. There are more than 30 sections of changes dealing with mandatory sentencing, parole and treatment for drug offenders. But the thrust of this effort is to find prudent ways to reduce the length of prison confinement for nonviolent criminals without jeopardizing public safety.

The bills would allow judges to depart from mandatory minimum sentences for nonviolent felonies; expedite parole; facilitate the transfer of inmates to halfway houses and group homes; and reduce the number of inmates returned to prison for technical parole violations, such as missing appointments.

As of July 1, the 2,293 prisoners serving time for parole infractions made up the largest segment of the state's prison population.

Researchers estimate that the state could reduce its inmate population by 3,000 in two years under the proposed changes. Some of the savings could be used to better supervise parolees.

By reducing time spent behind bars and increasing time in supervised parole, the state could increase the chances of inmates making smooth transitions back to society — in terms of finding a job and a home. Inmates are more likely to commit new crimes if they are simply dumped on the street after serving their sentences.

This bipartisan effort to reform sentencing deserves encouragement. It has the potential to reduce crime, save money and better protect society.

Portland Press Herald, Portland, Maine

A ruling by a three-judge panel of the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals to put what may be as much as a six-month hold on the recall election in California because of fairness issues with punch-card ballots in six counties is disturbing in a number of ways. One of the most important is that it extends that state's turmoil for entirely too long.

We think that the California constitution's recall provision has outlasted any value it may once have had. It remains in the law, however, and the current effort directed against Gov. Gray Davis is following an established process.

Further, it is a truism of political science that elections are snapshots of public sentiment valid only at the time they are held. If any given vote had been held six months earlier or later than its actual date, the result could easily have been different.

Yes, it is likely true that punch-card voting is too unreliable to use, as Florida's example in the 2000 presidential race proved, but wouldn't printing paper ballots even if they took several days to count be better than this? The recall process calls for a timely decision. Putting it off this long denies the people of the state the immediate resolution to which they are entitled by their constitution.

Thus the panel's decision, put on hold for seven days to allow for an appeal, should be overturned. The affected counties should, however, also find a way around their bad-ballot problem. Ballots for optical character readers exist in other counties, and if more were printed, the other counties' machines could be used to read them, even if that delayed a full count by a few days.

The alternative, unless the U.S. Supreme Court acts, is to throw the nation's largest state into even more turmoil than it already suffers.

"Underworld" Review

"A monstrous bite from underground"

By IKIMI DUBOSE
Staff Writer

A Lakeshore Entertainment release directed by Len Wiesman and starring Kate Beckinsale, Scott Speedman, Michael Sheen, and Shane Brolly. This movie is rated R for extreme gore/explicit language and violence. Running time is 121 minutes.

Just imagine the movies Blade, Return of the Vampire, X-Men, and Matrix combined into a new and improved vampire flick. This is the basic story of "staying with your own kind" to prevent controversy amongst the masses. Kate Beckinsale plays a sexy vampire named Selene, who makes her life goal to destroy the Lycans (werewolves). For many centuries the vampires have been fighting the Lycans for control of the underworld. During a routine Lycan capture things go sour and Selene loses a good friend.

While putting the puzzle together Selene discovers that the Lycans were hunting Michael Corvin (played by Scott Speedman.) From this moment on Selene is intrigued by Michael and she is determined to discover his resourcefulness to the Lycans. Throughout her research Selene discovers a lot about her history and the love she's building for an emerging werewolf. Although the plot is very to the point. It is interesting to see how the characters react to their forbidden attraction.

Many aspects of a typical vampire movie didn't appear in this film. The hunger for human blood was not an issue. These vampires are just relaxing around the house while having parties as they wait to awaken a dead spirit. They are physically all over each other while they enjoy champagne flutes of blood as if it was a Merlot.

Let's be serious people. Whatever happened to hunting your prey? The whole idea of death by garlic or a wooden stake may be just a bit old for this production. The Lycans and vampires are high tech now. Talk about the power of the magnum handgun with specially formulated bullets and step by step lessons for the entire cast from Keanu Reeves of the Matrix.

The Lycans are even a new breed of werewolf. Forget biting cheerleaders, woodsy areas, and being hairy. Think about fighting other werewolves for sport, killing only for a significant purpose, and being clean shaven. To top things off, the Lycans actually have a reason to be upset about the events that occurred in past centuries. Their presence in the film rids any preconceived notions you had.

Kate Beckinsale gets rid of her wannabe British girl appearance for a tight, bad-ass vinyl jumpsuit that had the male audience on fire. Bill Nighy plays Victor, a reincarnated vampire who returns to restore order in the underworld. He isn't as sexy as Scott Speedman but he makes you laugh with his smart antics.

Bottom Line

Overall, this was two toes up. The action never stopped. Nothing is as quenching as a bloody gun fight. (This is a production based on two different people from two different worlds that fall in love. Completely unaware of the lives they will shatter and the new life they will breed.)

WaterFire: A Providence experience

By ALEXANDRE R. DEAGUIAR
Staff Writer

Sunset comes. The lights are dim, the walkways are crowded and you can almost see the music echoing on the river water, on the sculptures, and on yourself. Under one of the bridges lighted by a lonely chandelier holding flickering candles you stand. The song being played reaches a climax, and on the water you witness a boat, its crew completely dressed in black, filled with firewood passes in front of you. One person in an eerie looking boat holds a torch; it will be used to light the steel pyres that stand inconspicuously on the water. When all braziers are ignited a wavering yellow light takes over the entire park. The sculpture is complete as dreamt by its creator. All senses of the spectator are held hostage: you see the flames and shadows, you hear the sounds of the crackling fire and the music, you smell the smoke coming from the burning wood, you sense the heat from the fire.

A concept created and executed by the artist Barnaby Evans, WaterFire started in 1994 with only eleven braziers. Due to the beauty and popularity of Evans' installation the WaterFire grew. In 1997 it had forty-two braziers (this year Mr. Evans won the Renaissance Award from the city of Providence), and by 1998 it reached eighty-one braziers.

Now, after almost 10 years, the WaterFire has become a tradition in Providence. During event nights a crowd of thousands gather in Providence's Water Place Park. Couples of all ages walk around, or find a little romantic niche to sit and enjoy the magic evening.

This year's WaterFire season is almost over; there will be a smaller version on October 11 (take your family during homecoming), and two full WaterFire lightings, one on Saturday, October 4 and the last one of the year on October 18. Those that just arrived in Providence should definitely attend this event. Take your friends, family, girlfriend or boyfriend.

The WaterFire here in Providence is an event of unique beauty that is able to take you to the, so many times forgotten, world of poetry, romance and fantasy. Enjoy your city!

Yes, summer is over... and we can see that when walking by the movie theaters. No more 1500 new blockbuster hits coming out everyday. October is not known for its movie hits, but here are two major openings for the first half of the month:

Out of Time - Directed by Carl Franklin, and starring Denzel Washington. Matt Lee Whitlock (Denzel) is as a Chief of Police, in a small town in Florida, who needs to solve a double-homicide case before he becomes the suspect. If you are a thriller, or a Denzel fan, definitely a must see.

The School of Rock - Directed by Richard Linklater and starring Jack Black and Joan Cusack (both from the amazing cast of the 2000 hit "High Fidelity"). This comedy is about a depressed rock star that gets fired from his band and, in order to get his act back together, decides to participate in a "battle of bands" contest. Rock's character takes a job as a 4th grade teacher, and ends up forming a rock band with the kids. The plot may sound "iffy", but those who know Black's performance in movies and TV will definitely enjoy this new enterprise. (source: www.imdb.com)

The J & W Library at University Hall during this month will have an exhibit entitled "Superior Women: when other women were minding the home, Gertrude Johnson and Mary Wales were founding a university," about the lives and accomplishments of its founders. You can check that on the first floor of the Library, at the Rare Books section.

CAREER CORNER

Career Fair Success Tips for Seniors

BY CELESTE BRANTOLINO
Director of Career Development

Career fairs are one venue you should be considering when embarking on your job search process. Why? These events can make your employment search much easier. It gives you the opportunity to meet recruiters and representatives from dozens of companies...all in one place, over only a few hours.

Keep in mind, career fairs are not a free-for-all and have their own unique set of challenges. Impressing so many employers from so many organizations requires a lot of preparation, skill, practice, and most importantly...stamina.

To grasp the magnitude, take a simple interview...magnify it ten fold and put thousands of other qualified candidates on the path to the same goal, and you will have accurately described what it means to participate in a career fair. For this reason, it is important to plan a strategy to not only survive, but to thrive at career fairs.

Do Your Research & Develop a Plan of Attack

What you do BEFORE a career fair can be just as important as what you do when you get there. So what should you do?

You need to conduct some thorough research. Whenever the Career Development Office hosts career fairs, a list of attending companies will always be posted on the public folders system, followed by company descriptions and websites. *To locate Career Conference employers, please visit the public folders. (In Outlook: go to Providence Campus, then Career Development, followed by

Resources for Students, and finally look for Career Conference).

Review the list and download the companies that interest you. Peruse the websites of every company you plan to approach and get a grasp for the culture, feel, and skill requirements for the organization. Write down the key company points and bring them with you. Organize and compile your research so that it's accessible; you can always refer to it to refresh your memory. Also, before you approach a company's booth, take a quick look at its key facts.

Unfortunately, you may not have enough time to visit all of the companies that you researched; it is important to prioritize your list, in order of importance.

Resumes: Don't Leave Home Without 'Em

How many resumes should you bring to a career fair?

Ten? Fifty? One hundred...?

Well, that depends on the number of companies that spark your interest. But to play it safe, follow this rule of thumb: Bring 20 more resumes than you think you'll need. You don't want to find yourself halfway through the career fair and realize that you've run out.

If you have more than one version of your resume (say, one version for sales jobs and another for marketing jobs), bring 20 copies of each resume. After speaking with the recruiter, you will decide which resume is most appropriate.

The 3 P's --Polished, Poised and Presentable

Scenario: You're at a career fair. You walk up to a recruiter, smile and looking down at the ground or at the ceiling, say... "Hey, you got any jobs for marketing (international business, fashion, engineering, hospitality, culinary) majors?"

This is probably not the polished, confident approach you should utilize to guarantee an employment offer, so keep the following tips in mind:

The first 10 seconds are often the most important. So you need to make a strong first impression.

Prepare your introduction in advance. Practice how you'll greet a recruiter, (complete with smile and handshake), in front of a mirror at home. You should also prepare a one-minute summary that explains your background, which is defined as work experience, skill set, and interests, along with what type of career you're seeking. When the recruiter responds, you should maintain eye contact, (but don't get into a staring contest), relax your facial muscles, (it's okay to smile-but don't stand there grinning from ear to ear, or worst yet...expressionless). If you find that it's appropriate to take notes, have a notepad and pen available.

As the encounter comes to a close, shake the person's hand, ask for a business card, and thank them for their time. Most importantly, remember to write the employer a hand-written thank you note, thanking them for coming to Johnson & Wales to recruit, and for taking the time to speak with you regarding employment opportunities within their organization.

International Students Please Take Note: Do not inquire about sponsorship at a career fair; it is not the appropriate time. Think of the career fair as a first date. You wouldn't ask the person to commit to a long-term relationship after the first 5 minutes, so don't do it here. Once an employment offer is made, then you may inquire about sponsorship.

Sound natural and relaxed. Practice both your opening and your closing, until you no longer sound rehearsed. Consider videotaping yourself to view any annoying verbal or non-verbal ticks. Also, keep in mind that Career Coaches are available to conduct mock interviews with you as an additional service.

If you're confused about what to wear to a career fair, don't be. The answer is easy: a suit. You should dress just as professionally for a career fair as you would for an interview with a company. That means wearing a suit in a basic color, like: black or navy, with conservative shoes.

Very few absolutes occur when it comes to employment search techniques, but these two tactics are tried and true: Men must wear a tie; women must wear stockings. Beyond that, executing good grooming practices is also a safe bet.

If it's cold or raining, a coat rack will be available at most career fairs, so you won't want to have to unexpectedly lug around a heavy winter coat or wet raincoat.

Now it's time to put these tactics to good use. Career Conference is October 9, 2003 at the Rhode Island Convention Center. Show up on time; for graduating seniors, the event begins at 8:30 a.m. Remember...knock 'em dead.

You're lucky; Johnson & Wales University prepares you for a career with our experiential learning curriculum and we are respected nationally, as well as worldwide. Relax, take a deep breath, and fall back on what you've learned.

Olives

• Restaurant Review

By IKIMI DUBOSE
Staff Writer

Hidden behind the glitz and glamour of the overrated XO, Olives seeks its own identity on North Main Street. If you close your eyes and reminisce, you'll find yourself on the set of the real world Seattle.

Olives has embraced the idea of interior chaos. When I say chaos, I'm mentioning the décor. Far from hideous, Olives has everything out of place, but so well put together. Sitting at the bar, I'm overwhelmed by this after work crowd. It reminds me of an early evening in New York at a local social club. It is amazing to survey a room so full of life. Although it offers limited seating every guest looks satisfied. The striped and solid blue fabric that lines the softly cushioned chairs gives a lighter feeling to the restaurant. As I take a quick glance at the other end of the bar which looks to be a mile away, a life size photo of a naked woman catches my eye. It has no purpose, but it has a marvelous presence through the very dim lights and cigar smoke.

Right in the middle of the floor is a bar setup similar to that of an old Western saloon. To top off the evening they have an entertainment stage with live performances four nights a week. Most of all, there is an open kitchen, and I can't wait to savor the expeditor's voice. As a customer, this gives you the opportunity to observe the chefs in action. The expeditor's powerful voice keeps the flow of food steady and the appetite high.

The staff plays the dress code very simple in all black attire. I'm afraid that if I blink they'll fade into the walls. Though the staff appears to be a college student assembly, maturity is the secret. In a speedy manner the waitress arrived to take our drink orders and I went into shock. I was extremely impressed with her knowledge of the extensive drink list. Olives has a wide-ranging list of drinks including 52 martinis. I found myself intrigued by the adventurous James Bond martini. Seems Mr. Bond likes his martinis with gin and vodka, with a half-measure of Lillet and a lemon twist, according to Ian Fleming's Casino Royale. Despite the intimidating list of martinis and unusual draft beer brands, wine was not in abundance. For the first time in my life I felt a wine list was unnecessary. It wouldn't do Olives any justice. While I sipped on a classic "Appletini," I felt renewed. Not only do you get the traditional martini glass of your selection, you also receive a tiny glass carafe shot of your choice.

The spell was suddenly broken by the sound of the expeditor requesting a side of their homemade bleu cheese dressing for the Szechwan Wings.

Everything was going better than I expected. We ordered the California rolls and the calamari for appetizers. I couldn't see any Asian chefs in the kitchen, but the sushi rolls gave "Restaurant 10" a run for its money. For a finger licking good time we indulged in the crispy calamari. I watched the calamari as it was seasoned, breaded, and fried to order. The flavors were impeccable, and the garlic wine sauce gave my throat a tingle.

Merely peeking over my shoulder I noticed a guest enjoying the crudite platter that had such a fresh appearance.

We enjoyed the Polynesian Chicken with garlic mashed potatoes and seasonal vegetables soaked with Asian BBQ sauce. The chicken was cooked evenly despite the large portion. The few sauce drippings that escaped the grill marks made the mashed potatoes melt in your mouth. We also sampled the penne chicken pasta, an Italian classic. The pasta dish was remarkable. The cream sauce was made to order and the flavor unveiled this secret. With great shine, these tender chunks of well-seasoned chicken breast were as velvety as chocolate cake. This meal was fabulous. Olives presented outstanding dishes but plate presentations were far from the standards set by Tom Keller as seen in "The French Laundry." We completed the evening with the traditional apple strudel dessert made in house. I was so full from dinner that it took half of my energy to finish dessert.

Looking at this overcrowded loft space, I was pleased with my dining experience. I would definitely say this is one of the best dining experiences I have had in my life. As we topped off the meal with chocolate martinis, I happened to engage in a conversation with other guests at the bar. They complimented Olives with the utmost appreciation. At the lovely age of 40, a female patron commented, "Olives is my after work release. You may not believe me but I feel young again every time I'm here." Olives is a total experience, and a total package never lets you down. I found love behind XO.

Here is the Food Science Club's formula: the problem is students are interested in food science and product research and development but don't know where to begin. Their hypothesis is to open the door for students thinking or planning to work in research and development (R & D). The experiment is to expose students to the job duties and work opportunities related to the field. The analysis is that students will begin to understand the food science industry and decide if this is the direction of their career path. The conclusion is students who have decided in a career in food science have gained the knowledge and contacts to begin their job search in the field.

The Food Science Club launches the Fall with a dinner hosted by the NEIFT, New England Institute of Food Technologists. The Food Science Club, which started last spring, invited all of its members to join them to taste and recognize the variety of food companies New England has to offer. The dinner, held on the 25th of September, gave students a glimpse of the variety of food companies based in New England.

The Food Science Club is currently making plans for the 2003-2004 school year. The club is planning on holding several lab sessions at the culinary campus. The lab sessions include testing recipes and different products donated by food companies. Testing different types of flours and comparing fudge recipes are just some of the lab activities that the club has participated in. The club's advisor, Professor Lynn Tripp, is a food science teacher on the culinary campus. She has work experience in the industry in product research and development.

The club meets on Monday nights at 8:00 p.m. in the conference room on the second floor of the Harborside Recreational Center. The club's dues are $15.00 for the school year. The NEIFT membership, which costs five dollars for students, is included in the dues. A weekly newsletter of the meeting's minutes may be inquired at www.michael-stockmyer@cox.net. Come by and be a part of the food science solution.

Newspaper investigation puts The Station club over capacity

The Providence Journal study exceeds the limit of 404 set by the town of West Warwick, and is greater than the number officials have said were in the club when it burned.

Associated Press

The Station nightclub was above its legal capacity when it caught fire on Feb. 20, killing 100 people and injuring nearly 200 others, according to an investigation published Sunday by The Providence Journal.

The newspaper puts 412 people inside the club when a band's pyrotechnics ignited highly flammable foam used around the stage as soundproofing.

That figure exceeds the limit of 404 set by the town of West Warwick, and is greater than the number officials have said were in the club when it burned. In public comments just after the fire, Gov. Don Carcieri estimated the crowd at around 350, but since then the state has called that number into question.

Attorney Jeff Pine, who represents club owner Jeffrey Derderian, declined comment when contacted by Journal reporters. Kathleen Hagerty, the lawyer for Derderian's brother, Michael, did not return a call seeking comment.

The attorneys didn't immediately return messages left Sunday by The Associated Press. A spokesman for the attorney general also did not return a phone message left Sunday.

The 412 names were compiled from interviews with lawyers, survivors, relatives of survivors and hospital officials. The list also includes the 100 people who died, as identified by the governor's office.

State officials have refused the Journal's requests for names of the survivors, claiming that making the information public would violate the privacy of people who were at The Station.

The state has kept all details of the fire secret as a grand jury weighs whether anyone should face criminal charges.

The capacity of the club has become a key issue for investigators as they try to determine whether The Station, equipped with four doors, had the correct number of exits. Many of the victims perished when they became trapped as they tried to leave the building.

Casey C. Grant, assistant chief engineer at the National Fire Protection Association, said enforcing the capacity limit for a building can be a matter of life and death.

"It's a very important number. It's one of the prime factors in making sure people can get out safely," Grant told the newspaper. "If we're exceeding that, we're flirting with danger."

Grant said occupancy limits are calculated to be the "worst-case" scenario of how many people can escape safely in an emergency.

The NFPA recently adopted new regulations requiring crowd managers at all places of assembly and mandatory "life safety evaluations" every year at venues with festival seating and a capacity of 250 or more. The regulations are only recommendations.

Rhode Island's new fire code, adopted in July, requires a crowd manager at gatherings of 300 or more during special "amusement" events.

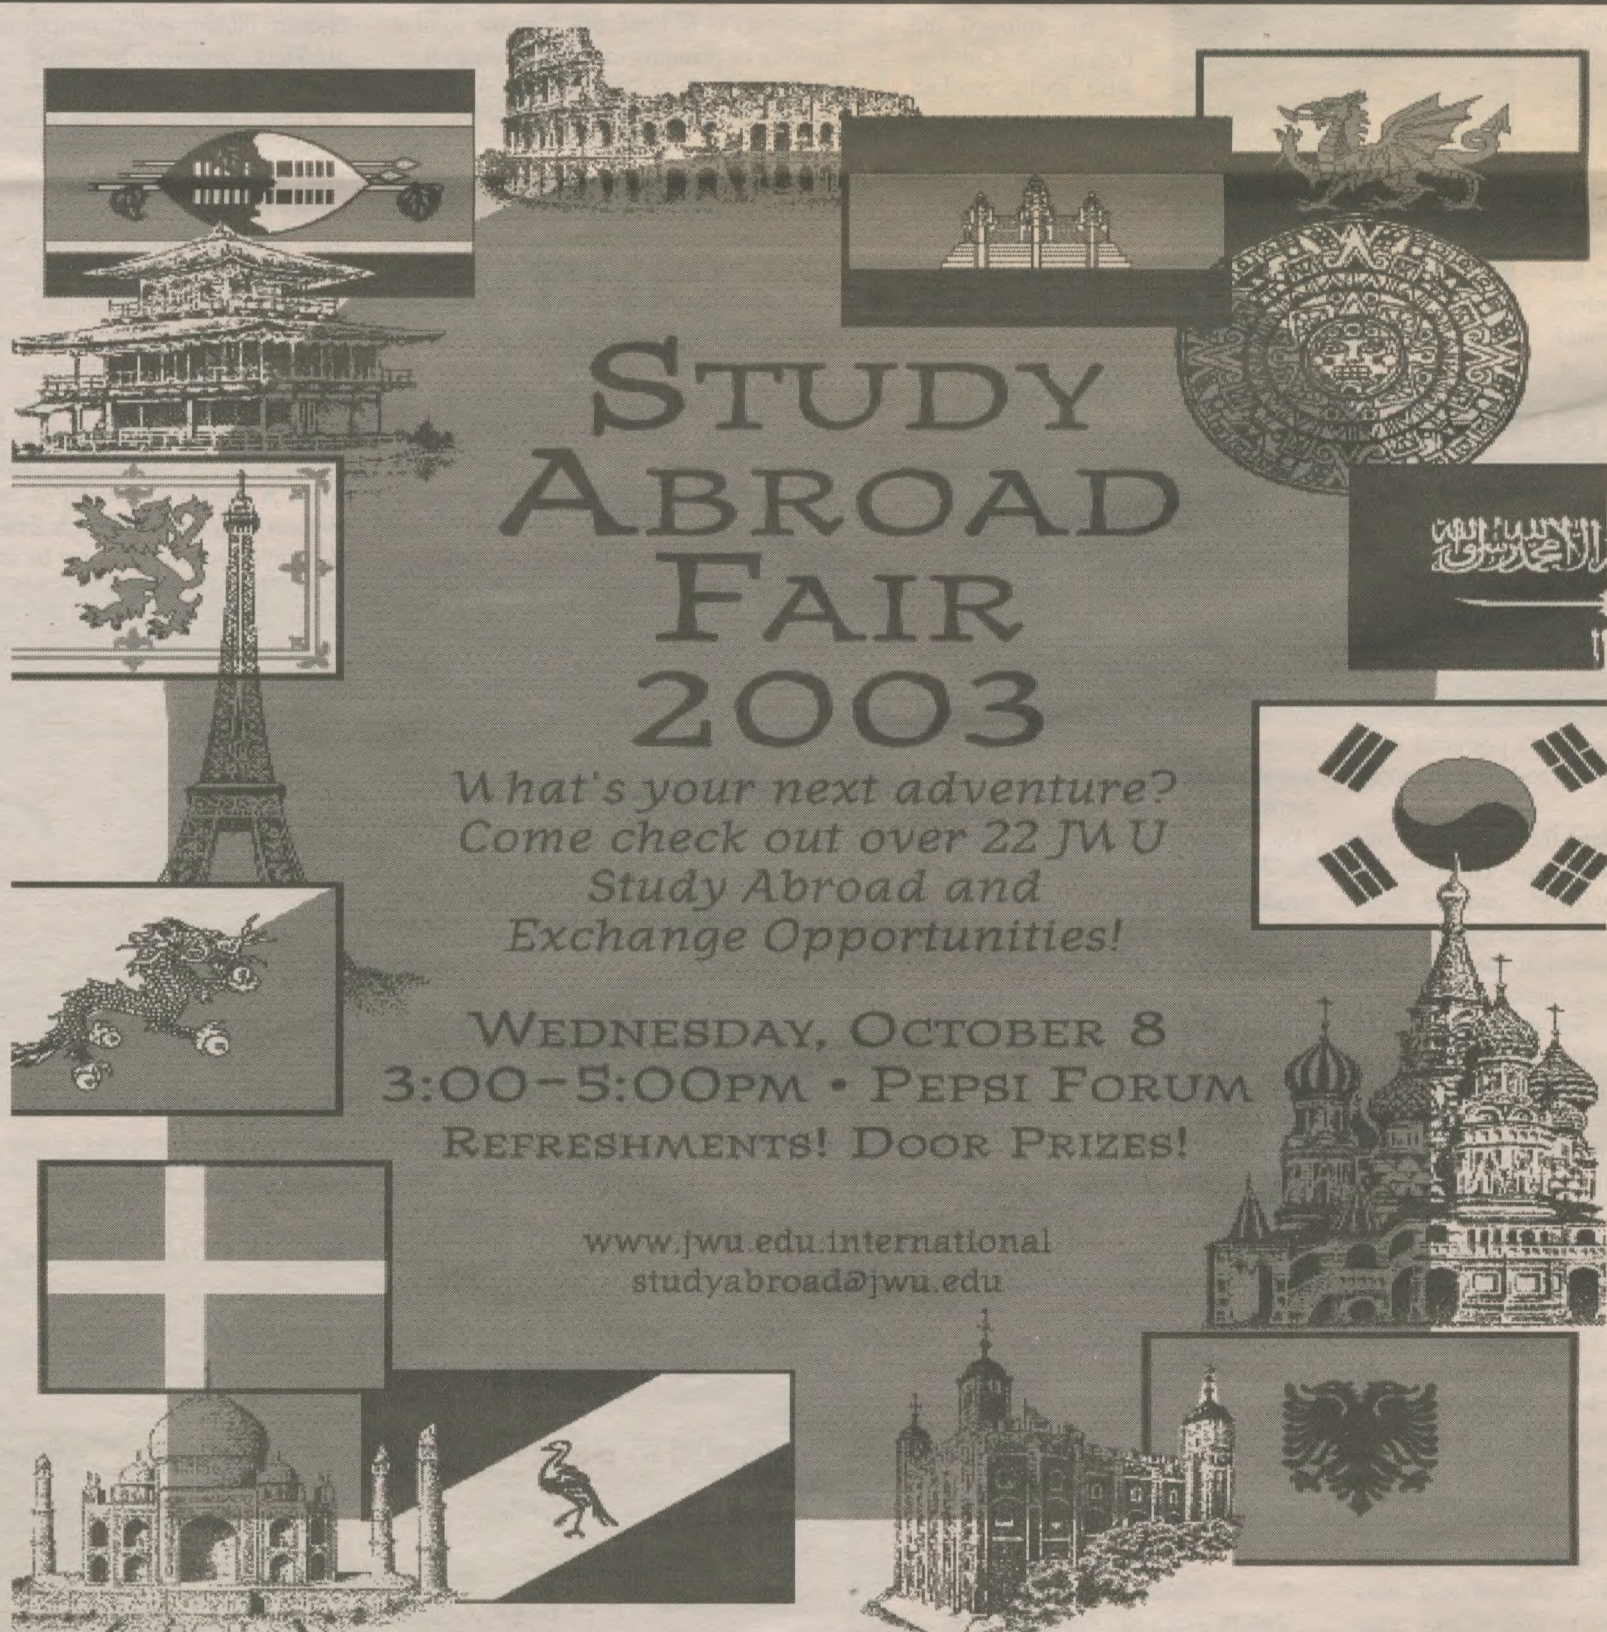

Crowd management specialists say evaluations expose a venue's shortcomings and a crowd manager helps direct people to an available door.

Under the fire code that governed The Station, inspectors could use three different formulas to determine the capacity, according to William Howe, chief of inspections for the state fire marshal.

In March 2000, when the Derderians took ownership of The Station, West Warwick Fire Marshal Denis Larocque calculated the capacity of the club at 258 when the tables and chairs were in place. He raised the limit to 404 when furniture was removed. The higher number required a firefighter on duty, according to town documents.

On Feb. 20, the Derderians hired a police officer to stand watch, but not a firefighter. One month after the blaze, when questioned about the failure to hire a firefighter, Hagerty said the Derderians never expected the club to reach or exceed capacity.
